A LOVE GAME

(Original.)

There are three of us bosom friends who understand one another perfectly—Tom Allison, Bob Turnlee and myself. We are forever chaffing one another, poking fun, ridiculing, abusing—in short, doing everything but praising. At times Tom and Bob will unite to hammer me unmercifully; then it will be Tom and I against Bob or Bob and I against Tom.

When Lydia first saw us together, she held her breath, expecting to see me land a blow plumb between Tom's eyes. Then she expected to see Tom pick up a poker and brain me. But when the process was repeated between Tom and Bob she began to wonder what it all meant. Finally she became fascinated with it.

"I'm going to try it with Mae," she said to me.

"Better not. Women won't stand that sort of thing," I said to her.

"I'd like to know why. They can stand it just as well as men—that is, if they want to."

"That's it exactly; they don't want to."

"I shall explain it all to Mae; then we'll begin."

"You'll lose your friend. I tell you what you do. Begin with a man. Specialists going in for a dangerous experiment first try it on a dog. I will be your dog in this instance."

"You don't seem to have a very high opinion of yourself."

"Never mind that. You wish to be on what I will call abusive terms with a very dear friend. After you have proved that you can stand such treatment yourself it will be time enough to try it on Mae. When shall we begin?"

"Now."

"Very well; now it is. We will play a rubber of pingpong. I will treat you exactly as I do Tom and Bob. If I offend you during two games, you give up your attempt with Mae."

She accepted the terms and we went to the table. She served the ball. At the first serve it struck the line between the courts.

"Get that equit out of your eye," I remarked, "and put the ball in the court."

I could see the blood mount to her cheek, but, with a spasmodic effort, she controlled herself and gave me the next ball properly. I am very expert at pingpong; when I returned it I landed it in her eye.

"You did that on purpose," she said hotly.

"Of course I did, and I'll do it again if you give me another such ball. That's not your side of the table. Stand on the other side."

She darted an angry glance at me, but bethought herself, and, biting her lip, proceeded with the game. We had a number of spirited returns, and at last she missed the ball and it rolled under a sofa. She waited for me to get it. Since I was playing with a woman and it was only in words that I was to treat her as a man, I complied. But I gave the usual grumble, "If you can't do any better than that, I'll send a balloon at you."

Again she bit her lip, but said nothing except to count, making a mistake. "Fifteen—love."

"See here," I said, laying my racket on the table. "If you can't win the game by a fair count, you'd better give it up."

"I meant love—fifteen; you know very well I did. You're trying to aggravate me. I'll aggravate you and see how you like it."

She served the ball viciously, and it fell clear of the table.

"There you—your horrid thing!"

"That's fine repartee. You'd make a good end man at a minstrel show."

By this time her eye shone with suppressed anger, and her cheeks were flaming. The game had only been begun, and I considered it ungenerous to push her too hard, so I let her alone till we stood forty—deuce; then I began a little prodigal. She had a very lugubrious look on her face, partly from anger and partly from injured innocence.

"Come, Mrs. Dismal," I said. "Why don't you weep a few tears? They'd blind your eyes and give me the game."

"I don't care. You're acting horribly. I never heard you talk this way before, even to Tom or Bob."

"Well, now, I like that. This would be peaches and cream to either of 'em. Vantage out!"

She was so flustered that she missed, though I had put the ball in the center of her court.

"That was foul!" she exclaimed.

"Oh, you plead the baby act, do you?"

"Nothing of the kind! I say it was a foul ball."

"Well, call it off. We'll call 'em all off except those that strike your racket. You'd better ram the handle in your hair and go to sleep. I'll send the ball against it and do your playing for you."

This can hardly be called a feather, but it "broke the camel's back." She threw down her racket, put her hands to her eyes, and, going to a sofa, buried her face in a pillow. It ended the game which was to decide whether a woman could stand a man's treatment of a man. It was the end of another game which we two had been playing, and in which I was ingloriously beaten. I went to her, put my arm about her and my face as near to hers as I could get it and said:

"Lydia, sweetheart, forgive me."

"You have acted very harshly."

"I have been brutal."

"You would not expect Tom or Bob to excuse such treatment."

"If I had crawled at the feet of either if I had acted half so badly."

I lifted her head, took away her hands and kissed her. After all it was a love game. F. A. MITCHELL.
